Collection Description

Biographical Note

Henry Edward Manning (July 15, 1808 - January 14, 1892) was one of the most influential English Roman Catholic figures of his time. From his ordination in the Church of England in 1832, through his conversion to Catholicism in 1851, and to his death in 1892, his words and actions were powerful influences in England, and in the Roman Catholic Church.

Manning was born the youngest son of William Manning and his second wife Mary (Hunter) Manning in Totteridge, Hertfordshire, England on July 15, 1808. His father was a wealthy West India merchant who held a Tory seat in Parliament from 1794 to 1830. Manning spent much of his youth at Coomb Bank, Sundridge, Kent, where he became a close friend of Charles and Christopher Wordsworth, later Bishops of St. Andrews and Lincoln. Befitting his father's position and influence, he attended Harrow Public School and in 1827 matriculated at Balliol College, Oxford. While at Oxford Manning developed close friendships with William Gladstone and James Hope (later Hope-Scott). He proved himself a distinguished speaker in the Oxford Union, serving as President in 1829 (Gladstone succeeded Manning as President). On December 2, 1830 he took a first-class degree in classics.

Manning's early ambition was a career in politics and with that goal in mind he assumed, through the Viscount Goderich, a post as supernumerary clerk in the colonial office. In 1832, he gave up his post and his political ambitions, due primarily to his father's substantial business losses, and resolved to pursue a clerical career. He returned to Oxford where he was elected a fellow at Merton College on April 27, 1832. Manning was ordained on December 23, 1832.

In 1833, Manning assumed a post as curate to the Reverend John Sargent, rector of Lavington-with-Graffham in Sussex. In that same year, following the death of the Reverend Sargent, Manning was appointed rector at Lavington and Graffham. On December 7, 1833 he married Caroline Sargent, third daughter of the late Reverends Sargent. The ceremony was presided over by the bride's brother-in-law Samuel Wilberforce, later successively bishop of Oxford and Winchester. On July 24 1837, shortly after Manning's appointment to the second rural deanery of Midhurst, Caroline died.

Though not directly involved with the Oxford or tractarian movement, Manning's own sentiments were increasingly High Church in character. He was a frequent critic of the social evils of his day such as abuses of wealth, poverty of the agricultural poor, and the lack of educational access for the poor and the new middle classes. In 1838, he took a leading role in the Church education movement. He was firmly convinced that a National system of clerically controlled education should be established. In December 1838, Manning and Gladstone visited Rome, where they met with Nicholas Wiseman (later Cardinal and Archbishop at Westminster) at the Vatican's English College.

By January 1841, Manning had been appointed archdeacon by Bishop Shuttleworth of Chichester. In 1842, he published The Unity of the Church a piece intended to compliment and to an extent correct, Gladstone's The State in It's Relations with the Church. That same year he was named select preacher at Oxford, where he came into close contact with the leaders of the Oxford Movement including: John Henry Newman (later Cardinal), William Ward, and Edward Bouverie Pusey. At that time Manning remained firmly a High Church Anglican, with no Roman Catholic sympathies. His anti-papal Gunpowder Plot sermon, given at St. Mary's on Guy Fawkes' Day, November 5, 1843, deeply grieved Newman, who by that time had strong Roman Catholic leanings.

When Newman and Ward converted to Roman Catholicism in 1845, Manning became one of the acknowledged leaders of the High Church Movement. However, during that period he was most closely associated with Gladstone and James Hope (later Hope-Scott). Following a serious illness in the Spring of 1847, Manning made an extended trip to the continent, traveling through Belgium and Germany on his way to Italy. While in Rome he met with Newman and had two audiences with Pope Pius IX. The trip left him favorably impressed with the vitality of the Roman Catholic Church in Europe.

On his return to England, Manning found the Anglican Church in disarray and deeply divided over the appointment of Renn Dickson Hampden to the See of Hereford. He quickly assumed a leadership role in the movement to protest that appointment. Manning's name headed the lists of Anglican clergy in opposition which appeared in the newspapers. Following the Hampden controversy, and through the influence of his brother-in-law Samuel Wilberforce, Manning was offered the position of sub-almoner to Queen Victoria, an assignment recognized as a stepping-stone to the episcopal bench. He respectfully refused the position.

On March 8, 1850, the Gorham Judgment, handed down by the judicial committee of the Privy Council, ordered the Bishop of Exeter to install George C. Gorham in the livings at Bramford Speke. The judgment was issued despite the Bishop's concerns about Gorham, a Calvinist theologian, and his views on Baptismal regeneration. Manning saw this as a clear case of governmental interference in a wholly spiritual matter. He saw the issue as vital to the church, and worked vigorously to have the judgment overturned. After failing to have the judgment overturned he attempted to resolve the issue through legislation.

Scope and Content Note

The Personal Papers of Henry Edward Manning (1822-1892) by no means cover every aspect and accomplishment by Cardinal Manning. Nevertheless they provide evidence that is necessary to understand many of the important events in his life: his conversion to Catholicism, his leading role in the adoption of the doctrine of papal infallibility, and the active part he took in effecting social change in England.

It is clear that Manning was devoted both to the Roman Catholic Church and to England. These two devotions were integrated and interacting. Often this integration was expressed in his sermons, speeches, and articles. His sermons were at times on topics such as education and poverty and his views on labor were within the context of his Christianity. For this reason no attempt has been made to divide them into secular and ecclesiastical subjects. Divisions have been made based on the kind of material rather than the subject. The Manning Collection includes seven distinct record series. They are Correspondence, Literary Works by Manning, Literary Works by Other Authors, Printed Material, Financial Records, Photographic Material, and Miscellaneous Material.

Series one, Correspondence, includes letters sent and received by Manning between 1822 and 1891. The letters include both personal notes and letters concerning theological and other issues important to Manning. Among prominent correspondents are William Ewart Gladstone, Florence Nightingale, Coventry Patmore, Mary C. Byles (Patmore), John Ruskin, Herbert Cardinal Vaughan, George Talbot, William Ewart Gladstone and a Mr. Verney (1885). Also included in Manning's correspondence is a series of letters with a penitent Mrs. William Manning.

The second series includes Literary Works by Manning and consists of sermons in both the Anglican (1833-1841) and Catholic (ca. 1860-1876) periods, sermon and meditation notes in the Anglican (1844-1850) and Catholic (1853-1889) periods, commonplace books (1852), manuscripts for articles and sermons (1865-1888), reminiscences (1891), and miscellaneous literary works (1835-ca. 1888). In addition this series contains a small manuscript volume, in Manning's hand, written for Mary C. Byles (Patmore) and three Manuscripts chapters by Manning probably written for Byles.

The third series, Literary Works by Other Authors contains material written between 1852 and 1891. Included are works on such topics as the Virgin Mary, St. Charles Borromeo, Julian the Apostate, and the Plain Chant.

Series four, Printed Material, consists of drafts from the First Vatican Council (1869-1870), galley proofs of books on the priesthood by Manning (ca. 1883), newspaper clippings (n.d.), and miscellaneous printed works (1822-1892).

The fifth series, Financial Records, consists of Manning's accounts with his publishers Burns and Oates (1874-1884).

Included in the sixth series, Photographic Materials, are carte-de-visite portraits of Manning, his friends, and associates (ca. 1865), and photographs and portraits of the martyrs (1870). The last series, series seven, contains Miscellaneous Material. Included in this series is an address book (n.d.), a filled in subscription form in French (ca. 1856), the autograph book of Pope Pius IX at Corpus Christi (1864), and other miscellaneous material such as music, a sonnet and a litany (n.d.).

The scope of the collection is limited. The correspondence, though limited, will give the researcher insights into Manning's personal relations and his clerical relations with his followers. The largest part of the collection consists of Manning's own literary works. Nevertheless the content and research potential provided by this series is rich. The sermons written by Manning during his Anglican period cover almost every book of the Old and New Testament. The sermon and meditation notes made during his Catholic years start in 1851, two years after his conversion and continue until 1889, two and a half years before his death. Here is documented the evolution, or as Manning himself claimed "the lack of evolution" in his beliefs throughout his life. Manning's other literary works will provide researchers with documentation on his role in the development of an English social conscience in the areas of poverty, education, the persecution of Jews in Russia, the African slave trade, the abuse of alcohol, and labor.

Another series that will prove to be rich for the researcher is the printed materials. The seven volumes of Concilii Vatican Documenta found in this series is invaluable to the student of Manning interested in his role in the adoption of the doctrine of papal infallibility. In addition to the Documenta, the galley proofs of books that Manning authored on the priesthood give insight into his thought process while developing these works.

While the collection is truly important for the documentation of Manning's public life, it lacks depth in documenting his private life. Manning shows a warmth toward many of his correspondents and his carte-de-visite portraits of his friends and colleagues suggests something of a sentimental nature, but the collection is conspicuously lacking in items such as diaries, journals, or memorabilia. However presumptuous it may be to assume that the private life of Manning was distinct from his public life, the researcher must be aware that most of the material in this collection was intended ultimately for the instruction or for the persuasion of an audience.

Arrangement Note

Organized into seven series: (1) Correspondence, (2) Literary Works by Manning, (3) Literary Works by Other Authors, (4) Printed Material, (5) Financial Records, (6) Photographic Material, (7) Miscellaneous Material.
