Collection Description

Biographical Note

William Coppinger was the Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne and Ross, located in County Cork, Ireland, from 1791 until his death in 1830.

Scope and Content Note

This collection consists of two bound volumes containing a handwritten translation by Bishop Coppinger of the French work, "An abridgement of the life and revelations of Jane Le Royer, called Sister Nativity, on becoming a nun at Fougères in the diocese of Rennes in Britany [sic]: with a sequel containing her interior life, as communicated by herself to her director and by him reduced into a regular narrative in the year 1800 at London and in the other places of his exile." The first book is three hundred and ninety-one pages in length and contains volumes 1-2. The second book is four hundred and eighty-one pages in length and contains volumes 3-4. Bishop Coppinger translated the material from 1820 to 1822.

The translation concerns the life and revelations of Jane Le Royer, a nun at the Urbanist Convent in Fougères, France. Le Royer was born on January 24, 1731 to Rini Le Royer and Mary Seneschal in Boulet, near Fougères. At the death of her parents in 1747, Le Royer found employment as a servant at a spiritual retreat near Fougères. She later joined the Order of Saint Clare, taking the name Sister Nativity. At the encouragement of the convent director, Mr. Audoin, she dictated a series of revelations concerning the Catholic Church. This manuscript was destroyed at Sister Nativity's request. On the death of Audoin a new director was installed, who again wrote down Le Royer's revelations. With the outbreak of the French Revolution, the director fled Fougères in 1791 and went into exile in London, where he prepared Sister Nativity's predictions for publication.
