heraldry. He developed a substantial collection of materials related to heraldry and histories of churches in Great Britain, and often sketched or painted images related to his research interests. Upon his death in 1848 his collection was dispersed and sold in pieces. Portions of Powell's collection are housed in a number of institutions in Great Britain including Oxford University and the British Library.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains information on multiple locations throughout England, but primarily the Church in Cottingham and its surrounding area (East Riding of Yorkshire), the Leiston Abbey (Suffolk), and the Landguard Fort (Suffolk, formerly considered Essex). There is an ornate pencil sketching of the Cottingham church (circa 1840) drawn by Miss J. M. Smith along with a letter from Smith to Powell, 1838. There are also general notes regarding the Church of Cottingham, its description, location, and place within the larger region, with some faint pencil sketches. There are notes and color drawings of the heraldry of Cottingham and stone rubbings from the church. The collection also contains a separate bound volume (12 pages) on information related to the Leiston Abbey and the Landguard Fort, both in Suffolk, as well as details on other abbeys. The bound volume contains a number of sketches as well as a watercolor presentation of the Landguard Fort from the view of the Harwich coast. The collection will be of particular interest to researchers of English heraldry and church histories in Yorkshire and Suffolk.
