Collection Description

Biographical Note
Kikalapati Vvarghavakavi (1663-1712) is the author of this Telugu Mahabhata.

Scope and Content Note
The Mahabhata is an epic poem detailing the Kuruksetra War and other shorter narratives including the story of Rama. The work was developed over a long period of time, dating as early as approximately 400 BCE and coming to its final form in Sanskrit around 400 CE. Three famous poets retold the Mahabhata into Telugu over several centuries. It was initiated by Nannaya in the eleventh century, and completed by Tikkana (thirteenth century) and Errapragda (fourteenth century). The particular edition of the Telugu Mahabhata represented by this manuscript is a separate endeavor by the poet Kikalapati Vvarghava. The Mahabhata contains 18 books (or parvas). This particular manuscript contains the Udyga parva (The book of Effort), the fifth parva. The Udyga parva covers the efforts to engender peace among the warring brothers: the Kauravas and the Pandavas.

This work was written on a palm-leaf manuscript (dried palm leaves were used as a medium for writing in South Asia). There is a total of 143 palm leaves in the manuscript. Each leaf is roughly 35mm x 430mm and is inscribed on both sides. There are also two holes in each leaf and the leaves are bound together with a cord running through the two holes and the whole manuscript is encased with wooden ends. Rounded scripts (such as Telugu) were used on palm-leaf manuscripts because angular letters split the leaves.
