Collection Description

Historical Note

Scholars Press was founded in 1974 by a consortium of academic societies to stimulate learning and encourage research and publication in the humanities, especially in the fields of biblical studies, religious studies, and classics. The Press sought to publish scholarly monographs economically by pooling resources, utilizing volunteer editors drawn from member societies, and lowering typesetting costs by using camera-ready copy and computerized printing. At its height in the 1990s, it published over 100 books a year (an estimated 15-20% of all scholarly books in religious studies), and maintained a subscriber list of over 30,000 members. Consortium members included the American Academy of Religion (AAR), Society of Biblical Literature (SBL), American Schools of Oriental Research (ASOR), American Society of Papyrologists (ASP), American Philological Association (APA), State University of New York, Binghamton, Center for the Study of World Religions, Harvard University, University of Pennsylvania, Eastern Buddhist Society, University of Illinois, Harvard Semitic Museum, Brown University, Boston College, Journal of Feminist Studies in Religion, Jewish Law Association, Journal of Religious Ethics, Anglican Theological Review, Case Western University, Emory University, the University of Illinois, the University of South Florida, the University of Montana, the California State University, Chico, and the University of Manitoba. The Press was funded by dues, fees, and grants from member societies, and grants from foundations, including the National Endowment for the Humanities, the Exxon Education Foundation, the Lilly Foundation, the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, the William & Flora Hewlett Foundation, the Kresge Foundation, the J. Howard Pew Freedom Trust, the Booth Ferris Foundation, the Arthur Vining Davis Foundation.

The Press began publishing in 1970, under the leadership of Robert W. Funk (1926-2005), a professor at the University of Montana and a member of the Society of Biblical Literature. Formally organized in 1974 under the aegis of the Center for Scholarly Publishing and Services (CSPS), the Press was sponsored by the American Academy of Religion and the Society of Biblical Literature, in an effort to gain economies in journal publication and to expand the scope of the two societies. The Press took on a full-time staff and became an affiliate of the University of Montana, which contributed two members to its board. Other societies, such as the American Schools for Oriental Research, the American Philological Association, and the American Society of Papyrologists, soon joined and contributed members to the board as well. The Press grew under Funk's leadership, publishing journals, dissertations, and monographs, and offering membership and subscription services for member societies. It moved to Chico, California in 1980, when it gained the sponsorship of California State University. Funk, however, resigned as director at the end of 1980.

C. Conrad Cherry (b. 1937) became director of the Press in 1981. The Press continued to grow, and the board decided to seek a new home connected with a major university. In 1985, the Press moved its headquarters to the campus of Emory University, Atlanta, Georgia.

Harry W. Gilmer was appointed director of the Press in 1987. Under Gilmer's direction, the Press gained the sponsorship of the Luce Foundation in the construction of a new, larger building on the Emory Campus. The Luce Center was opened in 1998, and provided offices not only for the Press, but for several affiliate societies, including the AAR and SBL.

With the retirement of Harry Gilmer in 1999, the Board retained the consulting services of the Center for Applied Research, the Wharton School, University of Pennsylvania, to determine the future of the Press. At its August 28-29, 1999 meeting, the Board reviewed the consultants' findings and determined that the changing economics of publication and the diverse directions of its constituent societies required a restructuring of the Press; this effectively meant its dissolution.

Scope and Content Note

The Scholars Press records are housed in six records boxes and arranged alphabetically and chronologically by folder. Series have been designated for Directors' Files, Board of Trustees records, Executive Committee Records, and Catalogs. The collection contains minutes, financial statements, reports, policies, by-laws, supporting documents, correspondence, and biographical materials relating to the operation of Scholars Press, as well as publication catalogs. It includes bound minutes of board meetings from 1983 to 1998, and loose-leaf minutes from 1975-1999, along with significant notes, financial records, and correspondence with board members, editors, representatives of participating organizations, and service providers.

The Directors' Files Series includes reports, correspondence, and policies of the directors of the Press, primarily Robert Funk, Conrad Cherry, and Harry Gilmer (including one folder of reactions to early publicity about the Jesus Seminar, which Funk chaired); also included are the 1997 architectural bid documents of the Scholars Press building at Emory University (later named the Luce Center). This series is arranged chronologically.

The Board of Trustees Series include minutes, financial papers, and supporting papers for the periodic meetings of the board; these records sometimes include extensive annotation and multiple drafts of documents. Correspondence in this series includes material from noted scholars such as Roger Bagnall, Martin Marty, Jacob Neusner, H. Kent Richards, and James Robinson. Also included in this series is biographical information about board members and Press employees, especially James T. Laney, Alexander Madison, John Schonleber, Charles Weltner, and James Wiggins. Board meeting records and bound minutes are arranged chronologically; other material is arranged alphabetically.

The Executive Committee Series comprise material from the governing subcommittee of the board, much of which overlaps the Board of Trustees records. This material provides background, context, and further information about the running of the board and the Press. This series is arranged chronologically.

The Catalog Series includes publication catalogs of Scholars Press books from 1973-1983. Some of these were included as part of AAR/SBL and APA Annual Meeting guides. This series is arranged chronologically.
