Emory Libraries provides copies of its finding aids for use only in research and private study. Copies supplied may not be copied for others or otherwise distributed without prior consent of the holding repository.

Appraisal Note

Acquired by Randy Gue, Curator of Modern Political and Historical Collections, as part of the Rose Library's holdings in LGBTQ history and culture.

Processing

Arranged and described at the item level by Andrew Kingston, November 2018. All titles in the container list have been transcribed from tape labels, and unique spellings have been retained. Original VHS tapes arrived numbered but in no discernible order; staff intellectually arranged the tapes in chronological order. Box 1 contains "memorabilia" from the show, which has been refoldered, and arranged in alphabetical order by record type.

Collection Description*Historical Note

The American Music Show was a public access television show produced in Atlanta, Georgia, from 1981-2005. This low-budget, weekly program was unscripted and unedited and usually recorded in private homes. It featured music videos and performances, as well as absurdist comedy skits, drag, political commentary, short films, games, interviews, and remote reports from Atlanta clubs and arts events. The show was co-produced by Dick Richards, David Goldman, James Bond, Patsy Duncan, and Bud "Beebo" Lowry. All of them often appeared on the show, along with a rotating cast of regular guests. Drag performer, musician, and actor RuPaul made his television debut on the American Music Show, and is featured in many of its episodes. According to co-producer Dick Richards, from a 1995 interview with Creative Loafing, the American Music Show attempted to "hold open this tiny window to let weird and interesting things into the lives of the people who choose to tune in."

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of 745 VHS tapes of Atlanta's longest running public access television program, the American Music Show, dating from 1981 to 2005. Episodes include music, comedic and drag performances, low-budget short films, political commentary, games, interviews, and remote reports on the Atlanta underground arts and music scenes. Drag queen, musician, and actor RuPaul made frequent appearances on the show. Other notable guests included musicians Jayne County and Larry Tee, and drag queens Lady Bunny and DeAundra Peek. The show also covered events like Wigstock, and recorded footage from various locations around Atlanta. There are also two episodes with commentary on Paris is Burning.

Also included are memorabilia from the show, including photographs, art, show credits, and written and printed materials (such as correspondence, episode lists, fan mail, and memoranda). One folder contains original photographs of RuPaul, as well as a letter written by RuPaul to Patsy Duncan. Additionally, there are three promotional items for the Coca-Cola brand collected as part of a protest against a recipe change.

Arrangement Note

VHS tapes were left largely in original order but are listed chronologically.
