Biographical Note

Thomas Stuart Birch (April 26, 1840-August 8, 1862), son of William Birch of Saylorville, Iowa, enlisted November 22, 1861, as a member of Company D, 2nd Iowa Infantry Regiment.

Scope and Content Note

This collection consists of four small pocket-size diaries and three letters and a typescript copy of both diaries and letters. The diaries (November 1861-August 1862) document Birch's activities and movements during his service in the United States Army's 2nd Iowa Infantry Regiment particularly at the Battle of Shilo. The letters (August 1862) are to Birch's father, William Birch, from officers and the chaplain of the 2nd Iowa, after T.S. Birch's death.

Box	Folder	Content
1	1	November 24, 1861 - January 6, 1862. After enlisting on November 22, 1861, Birch's regiment went by stage and boat to St. Louis and remained there drilling and guarding prisoners. There were many Confederate sympathizers among the population near the encampment.
1	2	January 7, 1862 - March 24, 1862. Birch relates experiences in camp. On February 10, 1862 his regiment began the trip down the Mississippi and up the Cumberland to Ft. Donelson, which they reached on February 14 in time to take part in the battle. On March 7 they moved on to Camp "McCluton" and then up the Tennessee River to camp across from Savannah on the 15th.
1	3	March 25, 1862 - June 30, 1862. Birch describes what he saw of the Battle of Shiloh. On June 4 the regiment moved to a camp near Corinth, Mississippi. On June 12 he became ill with diarrhea, from which he never fully recovered.
1	4	July 11, 1862 - August 5, 1862. In spite of his prolonged illness, his death on August 8, 1862 of "dropsy of the heart" was unexpected. He was buried near camp beside the railroad tracks with "religious and military rites."
