Collection Description

Biographical Note

Louis Everett Burnham (1915-1960), African American journalist and activist. Burnham was a member of the Southern Negro Youth Congress and served as editor of Freedom (a newspaper founded in New York in 1951 by Burnham and Paul Robeson) and the National Guardian.

Scope and Content Note

The collection contains material related to Louis Everett Burnham from 1941-1960. The collection includes a small amount of correspondence, notes and other materials related to communist and other left-wing organizations, writings, and printed material. Correspondence relates to the Southern Negro Youth Congress and Burnham's editorial work. Organizational material relates to the Southern Negro Youth Conference, the National Negro Labor Council, and Upholsterers' International Union of North America. These materials include Burnham's notes, typewritten copies of speeches and resolutions, and a few newsletters and reports. Writings in this collection are by Burnham and other authors such as Elizabeth Lawson and William Davis. Most concern race relations and the African American community. The writings by others probably are copies given to Burnham for editing. Printed material in this collection includes newspaper clippings about Burnham's death and a flier for the Louis E. Burnham fund. The collection also includes court documents related to the murder trial of James Morris Johnson in Pennsylvania in 1948-1951.

Arrangement Note

Arranged by record type.
