Collection DescriptionAdministrative History

The Center for Research in Social Change was established at Emory University in 1965 to promote the study of social change and to train students in methods of social research. Fred Roberts Crawford was appointed first director in 1966. Crawford, a witness to the liberation of the concentration camp at Dachau, Germany, founded and directed the project. Originally, the project's aim was to collect eye witness accounts from Holocaust survivors and camp liberators in order to refute claims that the Holocaust never occurred. Later, the goal was expanded to include documentation and analysis of the long-term effects of the Holocaust. The project also sought to document smaller concentration camps and sub-camps about which little was known.

Scope and Content Note

Project files from the Witness to the Holocaust project conducted by the Emory University Center for Research in Social Change from 1978-1982 include video recordings of interviews with concentration camp liberators and audio tapes and transcripts of conversations with camp survivors, many of them residents of Atlanta, Ga. The collection also contains a large collection of photographs depicting the prisoners, casualties, mass graves, facilities, and conditions in concentration camps. Additionally it includes subject files, including clippings, reports, and published materials relating to the Holocaust, Nazism, Israel, and Emory University's Holocaust project; photographs from the post-World War II era; and publications, including entire issues of such newspapers and magazines as Hadassah, Martyrdom and the Resistance, and The Southern Israelite. The collection documents events and long-term effects of the Holocaust.

Arrangement Note

Organized into six series: (1) Project materials, (2) Project publications and products, (3) Collected research materials, (4) Administrative Records, and (5) Financial and donor records.

Additional Descriptive Resource

Inventories, including donor information, of survivor and liberator photographs are available in the corresponding boxes.

Subseries 1.5

Photographs, circa 1945

Boxes 16-22, 48

Scope and Content

Subseries consists of photographs donated by liberators, survivors, and others. Photographs chiefly depict conditions in concentration camps in Germany, Austria, and Poland, particularly prisoners, casualties, mass grave sites, and facilities. Some are original prints and others are copies of photographs still held privately. The Witness to the Holocaust project staff numbered the photographs as they were received. Negatives for the photographs are in Subseries 1.5: Photographic negatives. Slides were made of some of the images and can be found in Subseries 1.6: Slides.

Arrangement Note

Arranged alphabetically by concentration camp, except Buchenwald and Dachau which are housed separately due to the volume of photographs. Later additions to this subseries (Box 48), processed in September 2013, are also grouped alphabetically by concentration camp name.

Terms Governing Use and Reproduction

Selected materials in this subseries (Box 21: Associate Press Wire Photographs) are the property of the Associated Press and may be used only for purposes of reproduction when authorized by the owner. They may not be syndicated, rented or loaned, or used for advertising purposes or for the purposes of trade.

Additional Interview Transcripts, 1978-1983
58-61

Scope and Content Note

Includes transcriptions of interviews with Holocaust survivors and liberators, some of which duplicate the content of interviews located elsewhere in the collection. The versions included here, however, are the transcriptions retained in the administrative files of the Witness to the Holocaust project through the 1990's, after the project donated the bulk of its interview records to the archives of Emory University. In many cases, an interviewer's evaluative notes accompany the interview transcript. It is divided into three subseries based on the medium of the original interview: (1.8a) audio, (1.8b) video, and (1.8c) self-interviews.

Arrangement Note

The contents of this series are arranged into three subseries according to the medium of the original interview: (1.8a) audio, (1.8b) video, and (1.8c) self-interviews.

Subseries consists of video recordings of a television series produced by the Witness to the Holocaust project. The Emory University Center for Research in Social Change began production of the series, entitled "Witness to the Holocaust," in April 1979. An interview with Major General George T. Duncan was filmed in November 1978, and it served as the prototype. It aired over Channel 5 (CBS-WAGA) and Channel 30 (PBS-Atlanta Public Schools). Copies of these programs were distributed to national PBS officials and to other institutions in West Germany, Israel and the United States. Several educational institutions in the United States purchased the series to use in conjunction with Holocaust courses. A second set of programs was produced in May 1981. This entire series aired over the educational network in Miami, Fla., starting in December 1981.
