Collection Description

Administrative History

The Educational Commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South was established by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South on May 22, 1914. Its purpose was to review the March 21, 1914 decision of the Supreme Court of Tennessee which in effect took away control of Vanderbilt University from the General Conference. The Commission was also instructed by the General Conference to make plans for the immediate establishment of a theology school or department to train Southern Methodist ministers and to consider plans for establishing two universities with such departments, one east and one west of the Mississippi River, to be owned and controlled by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South.

Upon recommendation of the Educational Commission, further action by the General Conference to re-establish the Church's former ties with Vanderbilt University stopped, and Emory College at Oxford, Georgia was moved to Atlanta in April, 1915 to become Emory University, the Church-owned institution east of the Mississippi River. The Candler School of Theology, established in Atlanta in September, 1914 by the General Conference on the Commission's recommendation, affiliated immediately with the new university. Negotiations leading to the incorporation of the Atlanta Medical College into the university were initiated by the Commission in 1915.

Also on recommendation of the Commission, a theological school was established in connection with Southern Methodist University's opening at Dallas, Texas in 1915. This seminary became the western counterpart of Emory University's Candler School of Theology.

Among the members of the Educational Commission were Bishop Warren A. Candler (Chairman), W. B. Murrah, James Henry McCoy, John Carlisle Kilgo and the Reverend Plato Tracy Durham. Asa Griggs Candler and William Danner Thomson were key lay members of the Commission.
