Administrative History

The Institute for Comparative and International Studies (ICIS) was founded in August of 1998 with the primary goal of fostering international and comparative studies across the Arts and Sciences division by enhancing international and comparative scholarship, teaching, and by developing new programs and activities.

The Institute was also given administrative responsibility for a number of previously independent units within Arts and Sciences including: the Center for International Programs Abroad (CIPA), the Emory Center for International Studies (ECIS), the Institute for African Studies (IAS), Asian Studies (AS), Latin American and Caribbean Studies (LACS) and Russian and East European Studies (REES).

At the beginning of the 2008-2009 academic year, the Institute was restructured and became the Institute of Critical International Studies. ICIS was closed in the spring of 2009.
