Collection DescriptionBiographical Note

Edith Maud Gonne was born December 21, 1866, at Tongham, Surrey. She was the daughter of Captain Thomas Gonne of the 17th Lancers and Edith Frith Gonne. Her childhood was spent in Ireland, London, and Paris. In 1891 she gave birth to Georges, fathered by Lucien Millevoeye; a daughter, Iseult, followed in 1895. Devoted to the cause of Irish nationalism, Maud Gonne was active in many political causes including housing for evicted farmers, food for school children, and improved conditions for Irish political prisoners. In 1900 she founded the Daughters of Erin, an organization that promoted women's involvement in nationalist causes. Among other activities, the organization established classes in Irish history and language. In 1902 Maud Gonne played the lead role in W.B. Yeats's Cathleen ni Houlihan. The following year, she married the Irish patriot Major John MacBride; the marriage ended in 1905. In later years, Maud Gonne was repeatedly imprisoned for her political activities. Her autobiography, A Servant of the Queen, was published in 1938 and offers an account of her early life. Maud Gonne is best remembered as the object of W.B. Yeats' love and as the inspiration of some of his finest poems.

Scope and Content Note

This collection includes letters, interviews, research materials, and photographs related to Maud Gonne. Included are ten letters by Maud Gonne written between 1902 and 1950 in which she discusses her marriage to Major John MacBride, her feelings for W.B. Yeats, and other subjects. Also present are four letters from her father, Thomas Gonne, written while serving in India. Among the photographs included in this collection are twelve photographs of Maud Gonne dating from her childhood through old age; other family members represented in photographs include her sister, Kathleen, and her husband, John MacBride.

The collection also includes extensive research files compiled by Professor Conrad Balliet in the course of his research into Maud Gonne, Olivia Shakespear, and W.B. Yeats.
