Collection Description*Biographical Note

Robert Edward Hanie, author, educator, and leader in organizations concerned with social change, was born in 1937. He taught school in East Africa (1961-1964) and studied at Emory University. Robert Hanie was founder and first director of the Georgia Conservancy, director of the Georgia Natural Areas Council, and executive director of Atlanta 2000, a public planning corporation founded in July 1973 to study the problems of human ecology that would be faced in the Atlanta metropolitan area by the turn of the twenty-first century.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of personal papers and organizational records. Personal papers include Hanie's birth certificate and correspondence, photographs, and printed material from his tenure as a teacher in East Africa (1961-1964). Organizational records include speeches, schedules, agendas, correspondence, reports, financial records, subject files, and printed materials documenting the span of the work of Atlanta 2000 and Hanie's association with the organization (1973-1979).

Arrangement Note

Unprocessed collection.
