Collection DescriptionBiographical Note

Harrold, Johnson and Company (Americus, Ga.), later known as Harrold Brothers, played a significant role in the marketing and supply system of southwestern Georgia. The business began in 1859 when an Americus bank agent, Henry R. Johnson, established a cotton warehouse, then formed a partnership with Uriah B. Harrold (1839-1907), the Georgia representative for a New York firm engaged in trade in the South. Continuing to operate the warehouse, the two men rented a store in which to sell the goods shipped to them by the New York supplier. Thomas Harrold (1814-1887) of New York, Uriah's father, brought his family through the Northern blockade to join them in the summer of 1861.

The firm survived the economic uncertainties of the Civil War and during the years of steadily increasing cotton production that followed, the firm prospered. Its members established peripheral industries - a cotton compress, an oil mill, a brick manufactory, a fertilizer plant, Americus's first power company. The members also invested in real estate, banking, railroads, and manufacturing. Central to all of these endeavors remained the buying, selling, and transporting of cotton and general merchandise (provisions, hardware, machinery, fuel, and building supplies).

In the decades following World War I, the effects of technological changes and the decline of the cotton economy in southwest Georgia, resulted in the closing or selling of the specialized industries. Following the death in 1953 of Frank P. Harrold, Uriah's son and the last surviving partner, the Harrold family sold the central business, Harrold Brothers, and fifteen years later its new owners closed the doors.
