Collection DescriptionBiographical Note

James E. Hinton (1936-2006) was born in Atlantic City, New Jersey. He attended college at Howard University (Washington, D.C.) in the 1950s and served in the United States Army from 1960-1962. He studied photography with Roy De Carava at the Kamoinge Photography Workshop for African Americans in 1963. Hinton worked as a freelance photographer throughout the 1960s, capturing images of the Civil Rights Movement in cities such as Atlanta, Georgia; Chicago, Illinois; and Harlem, New York, and photographing unknown activists and foot soldiers in the movement as well as leaders such as Martin Luther King, Jr.; Stokely Carmichael; H. Rap Brown; and Huey Newton. He also photographed artists and athletes including singer Mahalia Jackson and boxer Muhammed Ali. In the 1970s, Hinton began working in film and television as a cinematographer and director. He was the first African American to join a cameraman's union, Local 600 in New York City, and won an Emmy for his direction of WNEW's program "Black News."

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of the photographs and papers of James E. Hinton from 1954-2006 and primarily contains photograph prints, negatives, contact sheets, and slides. Images document the turbulent 1960s and 1970s and are predominantly of Civil Rights Movement events and activists; the Black Power Movement; the Anti-War Movement; African American artists, performers and athletes; and the films on which Hinton worked, including Greased Lightning and Don't Play Us Cheap. Hinton captured images of activists and civil rights leaders such as Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., H. Rap Brown (Jamil Al-Amin), Stokely Carmichael, and Amiri Baraka, as well as athletes and musicians, including Kareem Abdul Jabbar, Trevor Berbick, Muhammad Ali, Miles Davis, Alice Coltrane, Dizzy Gillespie, Isaac Hayes, and Andrew Hill. Hinton also documented programs such as The Children's Art Carnival, a nonprofit organization founded to create art programs for young people, and HARYOU (Harlem Youth Opportunities Unlimited), a social activist organization that worked to provide educational and employment opportunities for Harlem Youth. A small amount of personal papers document Hinton's exhibitions, work in the film industry, and military service.

Scope and Content Note

The series consists of Hinton's professional papers from 1958-2006 and includes correspondence, exhibition materials, promotional materials, contracts, and research material for projects on which Hinton worked. Hinton served as cinematographer on films such as Greased Lightning, Don't Play Us Cheap, which was a comedic musical written and directed by Melvin Van Peebles, and Eye of Life by pioneer Nigerian director Francis Oladele. The papers also give insight into Hinton's collaborations, such as photographing Black Gulf Oil Service Station owners and working with Herbert Kohl to produce a book documenting early graffiti, Golden Boy as Anthony Cool. This series also documents Hinton's exhibitions and collaborations with The Hudson River Museum (Yonkers, New York), The Library of Congress (Washington, D.C.), and The High Museum (Atlanta, Georgia). The series also includes posters collected by Hinton, clippings and printed material that feature Hinton's work, and a small amount of audiovisual material created and collected by Hinton.
