Collection Description

Historical Note

The New Lafayette Theatre, an African American theater company, was founded in 1966 at the site of the original Lafayette Theatre in Harlem, New York City. The theater's artistic director was Robert Macbeth, and the assistant director was playwright Ed Bullins. Company members included Rosanna Carter, Martha Charles, Estelle Evans, Sonny Jim Gaines, Bill Lathan, Whitman Mayo, and Roscoe Orman, among others. From 1968-1974, the theater produced a number of plays written by Bullins and Gaines, as well as workshops, experimental performances ("rituals"), and Black Theatre, a magazine edited by Bullins. The theater closed in 1974.

Bill (William E.) Lathan is an African American doctor, actor and director. Born in Philadelphia in 1937, he acted in several plays produced by the New Lafayette Theatre and directed Sometimes a Hard Head Makes a Soft Behind and What if It Had Turned Up Heads by Sonny Gaines. Lathan won an Obie award for his direction of the latter. Following the New Lafayette Theatre's closing in 1974, Lathan continued to direct and produce plays, including The Confessions of Stepin' Fetchit written by Matt Robinson and starring Roscoe Orman.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of material relating to the New Lafayette Theatre collected by Bill Lathan, including organizational records, printed material, and photographs from 1968-2008. Organizational records contain a small amount of correspondence; writings by Ed Bullins and Robert Macbeth; and a small amount of material documenting various projects. Printed material includes brochures, fliers, posters, programs, and tickets from the New Lafayette Theatre's productions, as well as clippings about the theater. Also included is printed material collected by Lathan from other theaters and events. Photographs primarily consist of group photos of New Lafayette Theatre company members, as well as a folder of head shots of Bill Lathan. The collection also includes a small amount of personal papers documenting Lathan's involvement in the broader theater community.

Arrangement Note

Arranged by record type.
