fighting until 1864, when the regiment went to Petersburg, Virginia. It is unknown whether he died there or surrendered with the regiment at Appomattox.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of 39 letters written primarily by James H. Lee to his wife, Joanne A. Lee and other family members from January 20, 1862 and July 27, 1864. They were written from Confederate military camps in Mobile and Montgomery, Alabama; Pensacola, Florida; Dalton and Augusta, Georgia; Charlotte, North Carolina; Columbia, South Carolina; Chattanooga, Cumberland Gap, and Strawberry Plains, Tennessee; and Coffins Farm and Petersburg, Virginia. James H. Lee wrote all but one of the letters--that having been written by W. D. Ingram to James H. Lee from Pensacola, Florida on January 20, 1862. Thirty-two of Lee's letters are to his wife and children, five to his father, and one to his sister. The letters in this collection are quite similar and primarily describe the monotony of daily life in an army camp and the deprivations endured by the common soldier. With the exception of some description of conditions in the trenches at Petersburg, Lee gives no account of battles or military maneuvers.

Arrangement Note

Arranged in chronological order.
