Collection Description*Historical Note

The Living Theatre was founded in 1947 by Judith Malina, a German-born student of Erwin Piscator, and Julian Beck, an abstract expressionist painter of the New York School, as an imaginative alternative to the commercial theater. The Living Theatre has staged nearly one hundred productions performed in eight languages in 28 countries on five continents.

During the 1950s and early 1960s in New York City, New York, The Living Theatre pioneered the unconventional staging of poetic drama, including the plays of American writers like Gertrude Stein, William Carlos Williams, Paul Goodman, Kenneth Rexroth and John Ashbery, as well as European writers, including Cocteau, Lorca, Brecht and Pirandello.

Many of the venues that the Living Theatre used to stage productions were closed by 1963, so in the mid-1960s, the company became a nomadic, touring ensemble. In Europe, they evolved into a collective, living and working together toward the creation of a new form of nonfictional acting based on the actor's political and physical commitment to using the theater as a medium for furthering social change.

Following the death of Julian Beck in 1985, cofounder, Judith Malina, and the company's new director, veteran Hanon Reznikov, opened a new performing space on Third Street in Manhattan's Lower East Side, producing a steady stream of innovative works. After the closing of the Third Street space in 1993, the company went on to produce shows in other New York City venues. The theater found another permanent home on Clinton Street in 2008.

Shortly after opening on Clinton Street, Hanon Reznikov unexpectedly passed away in May 2008. After having written most of the company's new plays following Julian's death, Hanon left his final work unfinished; Eureka!, based on the poem by Poe (also Poe's last major work). Judith completed the script and opened the play later that year. When the Clinton Street space closed in the spring of 2013, the Living Theatre began a nomadic existence once more.
