Collection Description

Biographical Note

Yvedt Love Matory (1956-2005) was born on a United States Air Force base in Misawa, Japan, to surgeon William E. Matory and Deborah Love Matory. She attended Shepherd Elementary School and Sidwell Friends School in Washington, D.C., and often spent time with her father in his surgical laboratory at Howard University College of Medicine (Washington, D.C.). She graduated from Yale University Medical School (New Haven, Connecticut) in 1981. Matory served as an intern at Yale University Hospital, as a resident at Howard University Hospital, and as a fellow at the School of Medicine at Juntendo University Hospital in Tokyo (Japan) and the National Cancer Institute (Rockville, Maryland). She joined the Department of Surgery at Brigham and Women's Hospital (Boston, Massachusetts) in 1992. In 2000, Matory completed a master's degree in business administration at Columbia University Business School (New York, New York) and founded a company, HospitalCareOnLine, that used computers and remote monitoring to provide health care for patients following their return home from the hospital.

Matory married author and Harvard University (Boston, Massachusetts) law professor Randall Kennedy in 1985 and the couple had three children: Henry William Kennedy, Thaddeus James Kennedy, and Rachel Elizabeth Kennedy. Matory died from cancer in 2005.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of photographs collected by Yvedt L. Matory and primarily includes black and white images of African American people from circa 1860-1960. There are also photographs of Chinese people, Japanese people, Javanese people, Indian people, and Tibetan people. The collection contains numerous photographic formats including cabinet cards, carte de visite, daguerreotypes, mounted and unmounted photographs, photo postcards, stereographs, and tintypes. The majority of the photographs are portraits, though there are some snapshots as well. The collection also includes picture postcards of African American people, Japanese people, and Native American people, as well as Chinese and Japanese art such as painted tiles and woodblock prints.

Arrangement Note

Arranged in alphabetical order by subject, then by format.
