Collection Description

Biographical Note

Daphne Muse is an African American writer and educator, as well as a collector of African American printed material and memorabilia. As a student at Fisk University in the 1960s, Muse worked with archival collections in the library. She was an elementary school teacher and also worked as a sales clerk and manager at Drum and Spear Bookstore in Washington, D.C. She was involved with literacy projects in Mississippi in the 1960s; worked as a secretary for the Angela Davis legal defense team in the 1970s; and was an English professor and administrator at Mills College in Oakland, California, and at the University of California at Berkeley from the 1970s-2000s.

Muse began collecting African American printed material and memorabilia as a young woman. She regards herself as a custodian of African American culture and history from the African American perspective, and considers her collection evidence of the vast intellectual and cultural contributions of African Americans to the wider American culture. She often uses the phrase "on these I stand" to describe both the materials within her collection and her own dedication to preserving them.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of the papers of Daphne Muse from circa 1960-2013, including correspondence, printed material and ephemera, and memorabilia. Correspondence is primarily between Muse and African American writer Alice Walker. Printed material includes book jackets, posters, and broadsides documenting African American and international political movements, as well as material relating to literature, music, and sports. Memorabilia includes objects relating to sports and athletics such as baseballs and dolls, as well as numerous political buttons. The collection does not contain Muse's writings or other personal or professional papers.

Arrangement Note

Unprocessed collection.
