Collection Description

Historical Note

Franklin Mieuli funded the construction of a new San Francisco FM radio station at 106.9 in 1958. The station was given the call letters KPUP and made its on-air debut on December 10, 1959. By mid-July 1960, the station changed its programming to jazz music and correspondingly took on the call letters KHIP. In 1962, Mieuli sold the station to Leon A. (Lee) Crosby, who changed the call letters to KMPX and instituted a programming format that included middle of the road music and foreign language programs. The 1967 hiring of two disk jockeys, Larry Miller and Tom Donahue, profoundly altered KMPX's programming as the two gradually turned the station into a hub for progressive rock music, with special emphasis on San Francisco-based bands. On March 18, 1968, the KMPX staff initiated a general strike over grievances with Lee Crosby. The strike lasted eight weeks, during which time the staff and its supporters picketed outside the station headquarters, joined by prominent rock bands like the Grateful Dead and Creedence Clearwater Revival. The strike ended with the loss of the original KMPX staff and many advertisers, in addition to the refusal of several bands, including the Grateful Dead and the Rolling Stones, to permit the station to play their music. KMPX continued to air its progressive rock music format until 1972, when the station switched to big band and swing music. Family Stations, Inc. acquired KMPX in 1978, changing its call letters to KEAR and introducing a religious talk radio and ethnic and inspirational music programming format. In 2005, Infinity Radio took over the station at 106.9, changing the call letters to KIFR and inaugurating a Free FM format that quickly failed. CBS Radio obtained the station in 2007, relaunching it as KFRC with classic hits programming. This programming was replaced in 2008 by a simulcast of CBS Radio's AM news station KCBS.

Scope and Content Note

The KMPX Collection of Nation of Islam recordings contains reel-to-reel audio recordings from KMPX radio station in San Francisco, broadcast from 1962 to 1970. The collection entirely consists of programming produced by the Nation of Islam. The programming includes weekly addresses by the organization's leader Elijah Muhammad and other significant ministers, including Louis Farrakhan, Henry Majied, Bernard Cushmeer, and Malcolm X. In addition, the recordings document other events organized by the Nation of Islam, such as religious observances, conference panels, and speaking engagements, as well as aspects of the funeral of Martin Luther King, Jr.

Arrangement Note

Arranged in alphabetical order by speaker and then chronologically.
