Collection Description

Biographical Note

Professor Carlos Rojas is known as a novelist, essayist, and scholar. Those who know him closely are also aware that he is an accomplished collage artist. He came to Emory University as an Assistant Professor of Spanish in 1960, after earning his PhD from the University of Madrid and teaching in Barcelona, Glasgow, and Rollins College in Florida. In 1968, he was promoted to full professor. That was the same year he published one of his best known novels, Auto de fe, and also the year he was awarded the National Prize for Literature in Spain. Other major literary awards were to follow: the Premio Planeta (1973), the Premio Nadal (1980), and the Premio Espejo de España (1984). In 1980, and in recognition of these and other achievements, Carlos Rojas was appointed Charles Howard Professor of Spanish Literature at Emory. And in 1987 he accepted the University Scholar/Teacher Award, which every year distinguishes a member of the faculty who has excelled as both teacher and scholar. After 35 years of service and scholarship at Emory, Rojas retired in the spring of 1995.

The Spanish Civil War (1936-1939), a historic event that Rojas experienced as a child growing up in Spain, constitutes one of the great themes of his essayistic and novelistic work. Some of Rojas' scholarly works that deal with this topic are Diálogos para otra España (1966), Diez figuras ante la Guerra Civil (rev. ed. 1977), and his most recent publication ¡Muera la inteligencia! ¡Viva la muerte! Salamanca, 1936, which turns on the confrontation between Unamuno and the fascist general Millan Astray. The title of one of Rojas' best novels, El valle de los Caídos (1978), refers to the basilica and necropolis erected in 1959 outside Madrid to commemorate the victims of the war. This work (published three years after Franco's death) presents a bleak view of Spanish history supervised by the constant presence of Goya, whose macabre and grotesque etchings function as emblems of the irrational course history has taken in Spain between the Napoleonic invasion of 1808 and the Civil War. This is the author's most translated novel to date, having found a second life in several Slavic languages and in Hungarian.

Carlos Rojas is the author of over twenty novels (including Aquelarre [1970], El ingenioso hidalgo y poeta Federico García Lorca asciende a los infiernos [1980], El jardín de las Hespérides [1988], El Jardín de atocha [1990], and Yo, Goya [1990]) and of two books on Picasso and Dalí, the last of which appeared in English in 1993 with the title Salvador Dalí or the Art of Spitting on Your Mother's Portrait.

Rojas' work is an impassioned dialog with Spanish history, art, and literature, whose major figures--Cervantes, Charles II the Bewitched, Alfonso XII, Velásquez, Goya, García Loca, Dalí, Picasso, Unamuno, Azaña, Godoy--protagonize many of his novels. His writing is full of insights on the Spanish conditions. These insights build up from work to work and organize themselves into a generalized vision of Spain that is at once tragic and farcical, exasperated and devoted: passionate, in a word.

But Rojas' books go beyond any narrow engagement with a specific national tradition. His interests are ecumenical, his cultural references broad, and the themes of his novels universal. The rhetorical form of his novels, moreover, while partaking in the great Hispanic tradition of Cervantes, Calderón, Unamuno, and Borges, knows no national boundaries. The ambiguous density of Rojas' novels is due in no small measure to the rhetoric of mirrors, dreams, illusion, theatre, and to an unusually rich command of the Spanish language.

It should also be noted that although all but one of Carlos Rojas' books were written in Spanish, their author was born in Barcelona, in the Catalan-speaking region of Spain. In 1982, Rojas published La Barcelona de Picasso, a tribute to both the city and to one of its most famous citizens.
