Collection Description

Biographical Note
Augustin E. Shore, Confederate soldier, served with Company I of the 33rd North Carolina Infantry Regiment, Lane's Brigade. During the Civil War, his wife Anna lived in Bethania, North Carolina; other relatives lived in North Carolina and Tennessee. Shore's brother, Edward H. Shore, and friends Ed and Sam Kiger, also served in the same regiment.

Scope and Content Note
The collection consists of photocopies of 36 letters of Augustin E. Shore, relatives, and friends from 1849-1877. Eleven pre-war letters tell of farm life in West Tennessee in the 1850s, including crops grown, prices, railroad routes, wages for work on railroads being built in the region, courtships, log rollings, etc. There is some information on stage routes in North Carolina.

Twenty letters deal with the war service of Augustin E. Shore, his brother, Edward H. Shore, and family friends Ed and Sam Kiger, who all served in the 33rd North Carolina Infantry Regiment. Fourteen of these letters are from Augustin Shore to his wife Anna E. Shore, covering the period 1862-1865. He describes hard marches and poor rations under Stonewall Jackson and other generals. While hospitalized at Fairview Hospital in Lexington, Virginia and Pratt Hospital in Lynchburg, Virginia from about July, 1863 to about May 1864, he describes the hardships of hospital life. After returning to active duty in May or June of 1864, he describes heavy fighting near Petersburg, Virginia in June and July 1864, and operations near Richmond, Virginia. Some of the originals are written in pencil, on poor paper, and are barely decipherable; a few are torn to the extent of loss of some of the content.

Arrangement Note
Arranged in chronological order.
