Collection DescriptionBiographical Note

Vantile Emmanuel Whitfield, African American playwright and director known as Motojicho, was born on September 8, 1930, in Washington, D.C. to Theodore Roosevelt Whitfield and Lugene Ellen Green. He attended Dunbar High School, graduating in 1948. Following high school, he joined the Air Force and served until 1952. He graduated from Howard University (Washington, D.C.) in 1957 with a bachelor's degree in theatre and design, and received a master's degree in film production from the University of California, Los Angeles in 1967. In 1963, Whitfield co-founded the American Theatre of Being in Los Angeles where he taught classes with such actors as Isabel Sanford and Whitman Mayo. He also worked in television in Los Angeles, directing a team of reporters covering the Watts riots of 1967 and 1968 and producing and co-hosting a half-hour program called "From the Inside Out." In the 1970s, he co-founded the D.C. Black Repertory Company and was founding director of the National Endowment for the Arts Expansion Arts Program in 1971. Under that program, he awarded millions of dollars' worth of grants to artists and arts organizations in minority communities. Whitfield wrote numerous plays, including Changes, which debuted at the D.C. Black Repertory Company to standing-room-only audiences in 1973. He also designed sets for the James Baldwin play The Amen Corner (1963) and produced and directed a Bill Cosby special on NBC (1971). He died in 2005.

Scope and Content Note

The collection consists of the papers of Vantile E. Whitfield from 1953-2005 and includes records of the D.C. Black Repertory Company, writings by Whitfield and others, Whitfield's professional and personal papers, photographs, and printed material. The collection primarily documents Whitfield's professional life. Records of the D.C. Black Repertory Company contain administrative documents, as well as planning and promotional material for productions. There is a significant amount of material relating to the company's production of Whitfield's Changes, including recordings. Writings in the collection consist primarily of scripts by Whitfield and others, most notably drafts of James Baldwin's and Arnold Pearl's screenplay adaption of The Autobiography of Malcolm X. Other professional papers contain correspondence and subject files documenting Whitfield's work with organizations, such as the Creative Arts Foundation, Arts Media Services, the National Endowment for the Arts Expansion Arts Program, American Theatre of Being, and the Performing Arts Center of Los Angeles. Personal papers include an address book, certificates, and Whitfield's wallet. Photographs contain headshots, stills of movies and plays, and images of Whitfield. Printed material consists mostly of clippings and event brochures.

Arrangement Note

Arranged by record type.
